Live Interactive Webinar Friday, April 9, 2021

Choose morning or afternoon session:
8:00am - 12:15pm - or - 1:00pm - 5:15pm

OBJECTIVES

1. Analyze what we continue to learn regarding the modes of transmission.
2. Determine the risk factors that correlate to complications of COVID-19.
3. Appraise the best treatments for COVID-19 complications.
4. Differentiate between the vaccines for COVID-19 in detail (mRNA & vector associated).
5. Respond confidently to patient questions regarding safety of the COVID-19 vaccines.

Critical Coronavirus Updates for the Healthcare Team:

Presented by a CDC/Public Health Epidemiologist

For those of us in healthcare, this past year has been very challenging. We were thrust in to treating a virus that we knew little about. At first.

As time has continued, we have become more skillful at treating patients suffering the consequences of COVID-19. At incredible speed and efficiency, we also now have access to two highly effective vaccines to prevent the virus that causes COVID-19. Because of how quickly new research and new findings are being released related to the vaccines and COVID-19 in general, there are plenty of questions that exist. Questions from patients certainly. And questions for those of us on the frontlines as well.

Join me, Barry Inman, a CDC/Public Health Epidemiologist, for a 4 hour presentation that will tackle what you must know today. I will synthesize the growing body of evidence and guidelines so that you also have a greater confidence and authority. Let's continue to learn from one another. To be our best. So that we can give our best to the patients we see. There is so much hope on the horizon!

William "Barry" Inman, BA-BS, CIC and the PESI Healthcare Team

MEET YOUR SPEAKER

William "Barry" Inman, BA-BS, CIC, has 31 years of experience as an epidemiologist. He works for the Brevard County Health Department in Merritt Island, Florida. He is responsible for the development and implementation of surveillance and investigation of all communicable diseases. Barry has completed advanced training in bio-terrorism through the Department of Health in Florida, Center for Disease Control and Prevention, and the United States Army Institute of Research for Infectious Diseases.

Because of his extensive experience and education, he has assisted the CDC and Quarantine Service with the investigation of outbreaks on cruise ships for legionella, rubella, measles, norovirus and MRSA. He has done communicable disease investigations in long-term care facilities, hospitals, cruise ships, nursing homes and day-care facilities. Barry has developed infection control programs for hospitals, long-term care facilities, rehab centers, health departments and others. After Hurricane Katrina, he was part of the CDC team that developed an epidemiology/surveillance program for disaster response.

Barry has won numerous awards from the National Association of County and Community Health Organizations and writes a quarterly article for the AMA Journal on various infectious diseases.
