Objectives

1. Analyze the neurobiology of anger and the brain regions involved in processing anger.
2. Investigate behavioral and bodily effects of anger and its influence on cognition.
3. Evaluate the clinical implications of the association between anger and substance abuse.
4. Analyze how mindfulness techniques can be used to help clinicians engage reluctant and treatment-resistant clients.
5. Employ mindfulness training and diaphragmatic breathing techniques that diminish the body’s fight-or-flight response.
6. Practice mindfulness skills that effectively intervene in dysfunctional thoughts and judgmental beliefs.
7. Investigate the relationship between anger types and problem behaviors in clients.
8. Investigate how clinicians can frame anger problems in a humanistic and compassionate manner that leverages client rapport and client insight.
9. Employ strategies to help clients leverage acceptance of others to diminish angry externalizations and displacement of frustration.
10. Employ mindfulness strategies to decrease levels of impulsivity and aggressiveness in angry clients.
11. Investigate the use of Yalom-style process-focused groups to reinforce skill acquisition and responsiveness in the treatment of anger and aggression.
12. Investigate how clinicians can navigate politically and ideologically provocative client self-disclosures in therapy.

2-Day Intensive Anger Management Certification Training

Unhealthy anger can be one of the most frustrating and frightening emotions therapists work with.

Many clients aren't ready to make a change. Forced into therapy by their partner, employer, or court system they don't give you anything to work with, making sessions feel flat and pointless.

Other angry clients are aggressive in session. They yell, posture and question your competence. It can catch you off-guard leaving you uneasy, uncomfortable and trying to manage your own visceral reaction to their rage.

It's exhausting and you wish there was a better way.

Pavel Somov, PhD is a licensed psychologist with over 20 years of clinical experience and the author of Anger Management Jumpstart: A 4-Session Mindfulness Path to Compassion and Change (PESI Publishing, 2013).

In this 2-day certification training, Dr. Somov will change your approach to anger management with the mindfulness-based tools and clinical interventions you need to help your clients accept their anger, more fully engage in treatment, and reduce their destructive responses to it!

Full of practical applications, experiential exercises and detailed instruction, Dr. Somov will show you how you can:

- Employ rapid fire techniques for managing anger in the moment
- Build greater engagement and make angry and avoidant clients feel heard
- Improve impulse control and self-regulation with a 4-session approach
- Use group work strategies to reinforce skill acquisition
- Give clients the tools they need to communicate anger without aggression
- Tactfully introduce clinical homework to people who don't want to be told what to do
- And much more!

Best of all, you can add a valuable certification to your resume and become a Certified Specialist in Anger Management (CSAM) through Evergreen Certifications upon completion of this training at no additional cost to you!

Don't miss your chance to fundamentally change your approach to working with anger and add to your clinical toolbox!
