Dissociative Identity Disorder

Diagnosis, Stabilization and Complex Trauma Treatment in Clients with DID

Featuring
Greg Nooney, LISW Author of Diagnosing and Treating Dissociative Identity Disorder

- Assessment tools to avoid false positive and false negatives
- Strategies to work with gaps in memory
- Tips for handling rapid personality switching in session
- Stabilization techniques for resourcing and safety

Objectives

1. Analyze the role of attachment wounds and early childhood trauma in the development and treatment of clients with dissociative disorders.
2. Use dissociative-related enquiries in initial assessments to better identify dissociative symptoms in clients.
3. Differentiate dissociative identity disorder from other disorders to make more accurate diagnoses and avoid false positives or false negatives.
4. Use cognitive and somatic approaches to aid in the stabilization phase of treatment in clients with DID.
5. Manage rapid personality switching with in-session strategies to lessen disruption to the therapeutic process.
6. Use trauma-focused approaches to improve traumatic memory processing in the treatment of clients with DID.

Dissociative Identity Disorder: Diagnosis, Stabilization and Complex Trauma Treatment in Clients with DID

When clients come to you seeking relief from their traumatic pasts it feels like familiar work. Difficult, but familiar.

But in cases of extreme past abuse, you may have clients who seem to be losing time. Not remembering things they've said and done.

You may even encounter multiple identities that can alarm you.

Despite deeply entrenched views, studies suggest dissociative identity disorder is more prevalent than once believed. And if you treat trauma, the likelihood of you encountering a client with DID may be higher than you think.

Without a therapeutic plan, you could find yourself unnerved, unprepared and unable to help when these clients show up in your caseload.

Greg Nooney is the author of Diagnosing and Treating Dissociative Identity Disorder (NASW Press, 2022). A therapist for more than 35 years, he's worked with hundreds of clients with severe trauma, dissociative symptoms, and dissociative identity disorder.

Join him for this one-day webinar and discover a step-by-step guide on how you can diagnose, stabilize and treat trauma in these complex clients.

When you register you'll get:

- Assessment tools to avoid false positive and false negatives
- Clinical strategies to work with secrets and gaps in memory
- Tips for handling rapid personality switching in session
- Stabilization techniques for resourcing and safety
- Approaches for doing trauma specific work with DID clients

Don't miss this chance to complete your trauma treatment toolbox and help clients overcome the pain their parts are carrying.

Meet Your Speaker

Greg Nooney, MSW, LISW, has worked with clients with serious mental illness and dissociative disorders for over 35 years. He's received specialized training in treating severely dissociated clients and is the author of Diagnosing and Treating Dissociative Identity Disorder: A Guide for Social Workers and All Frontline Staff (National Association of Social Workers Press, 2021).

A highly respected trainer on trauma-related dissociation, dissociative identity disorder, ethics, narrative therapy practices, treating severe trauma, and burnout, Greg shares his years of knowledge and clinical experience with professionals at seminars and conferences throughout the country.

He has worked in mental health centers, psychiatric hospitals, private practice and most recently at Burgess Health Center where he was the director of the mental health section for a decade. He is an adjunct instructor at the University of Iowa School of Social Work and has served as a field instructor for Master of Social Work Students at the University of Iowa, University of Nebraska, and the University of North Carolina. Greg earned his master's in social work from Loyola University in Chicago and is available to provide workshops and trainings as well as supervision to social workers, and consultations for therapists working with clients with DID. He can be contacted through his website at www.gregnooney.com.
