- Encourage self-awareness and accountability in supervisees
- Increase supervisor self-awareness and development of antiracist supervision
- Tools for assessing barriers to cultural competence

Broaching Race and Racial Trauma with Supervisees

- Microaggressions and race-based trauma
- Health ramifications of race-based and secondary traumatic stress
- Racial battle fatigue – causes and stress reactions
- Racial socialization and impact on clinical and supervisory practice
- Ask clients directly about discrimination, racial stress, and racial trauma
- Translate distinct multicultural models into a cohesive approach to intervention
- Therapeutic missteps in incorrectly assessing, conceptualizing, and contextualizing contributors to supervisee worldview
- Clarify importance of intersectionality in supervisors, supervisees, and client case conceptualization
- Understand socio-political context when assessing the presentations of supervisees and their clients
- Understand and utilize the dynamic interaction of difference within supervision and counseling relationships
- Teach supervisees the use of client case conceptualization guide for assessing key diversity-related contributors to client presentation

Objectives

1. Analyze the impact of cultural humility and self-and-other awareness on rapport building and intervention success in supervisory relationships.
2. Develop steps for clearly approaching antiracist, culturally-rooted, and trauma-informed case conceptualization in supervision.
3. Apply understanding of worldview and racial identity to ethical supervisee development and clinical case conceptualization.
4. Determine key factors in fostering ethical, culturally humble, and clinically helpful conversations around race and diversity in supervision.
5. Integrate the developmental language and focus needed for personal and supervisee cultural competence assessment and development.
6. Apply professional codes of ethics in the area of multicultural competence and supervision.
7. Utilize case conceptualization guides to enhance intervention effectiveness in multicultural supervision.

Culturally Responsive Clinical Supervision

As a supervisor, I struggled with knowing how to teach my supervisees how to be culturally competent.

My students knew all of the multicultural theories and models, but they weren’t engaging with clients effectively.

Then I discovered a how to make my supervision method antiracist – by teaching and modeling key ways to broach the topics of race and racial trauma... showing supervisees how to utilize the dynamic interaction of difference within supervision sessions... and demonstrating how to integrate multicultural theory into a cohesive intervention approach.

Join me in my advanced supervision workshop and I’ll share this essential information with you. We’ll go beyond the basics together, and you’ll get:

- Tools for teaching supervisees how to therapeutically discuss race, culture, power, privilege, oppression, and intersectionality
- A roadmap for ethical, culturally-rooted and trauma-informed case conceptualization
- Guidance for delivering social justice-drive intervention and advocacy

Don’t miss this opportunity to become a culturally responsive supervisor! Register today!
